

UNITED NATIONS
CORRESPONDENTS ASSOCIATION: JOURNALISM

Working of the Committee

At Sanskriti Model United Nations, the United Nations Correspondents Association has crystallised itself as a creative outlet for writers, photographers and cartoonists. The UNCA separates itself from other committees at SMUN by covering its proceedings and debating issues that are highly relevant to the state of media today. Examples of such issues include the safety of the press and cases of erosion of freedom of speech. It is but the perfect platform for developing one's incipient talent as a writer, cartoonist or photographer whilst acknowledging the complications of furnishing the masses with information.

The efforts of the budding delegates from across the three branches- Photography, Journalism, and Cartoonists, will be recognised in the online blog. Based purely on merit, a select few submissions will also be published in the daily newsletter. The newsletter aims to serve as a short-term goal to enhance one's written performance. Evaluating other people's work will also help add another perspective to one's writing.

Every morning, the delegates are required to convene in their respective venues, where they will be briefed on that day's proceedings, their assignments for that session, and the qualitative and quantitative expectations for each assignment. They will be informed of the deadline for every task. Correspondents must meet every deadline, as is the expectation in modern-day press. Delays of any sort won't be looked upon favourably by the Executive Board.

The Committee will be divided between its reporting and debating sessions. For a reporting session, the correspondents decide whether to attend committee proceedings or remain in their respective rooms to complete their tasks. If a delegate chooses to do the former, it must be noted that members of the press are not allowed to interfere with committee procedure. They must simply observe it. However, delegates are permitted and highly encouraged to communicate, question, and clarify issues with delegates using chits. They may approach the Executive Board if required.

Please note that press members are allowed to carry and use electronic devices during the conference. Internet connectivity will, however, only be available in the UNCA room. Usage is only permitted for research purposes. Their usage for anything else will not be looked upon favourably by the Executive Board.

The use of tools such as Chat-GPT or AI humanisers or plagiarism will be frowned upon. Delegates are encouraged to uphold journalistic ethics in every action they take during this conference.

All lobbying must take place on a platform approved and monitored by the Executive Board. Offensive language is highly prohibited and will lead to a direct disqualification from the awards process. All members of the Executive Board must be added to all WhatsApp groups created with the intention of lobbying.

Press Conference

Note: This section is for both Journalists and Cartoonist

Press conferences serve as a perfect platform for correspondents to voice questions from the public to those in positions of power, and inculcate a spirit of accountability. It holds corrupt policy makers responsible for their unjust actions. This bestows upon the media the power to shape the viewpoints of billions of people all over the world.

At SMUN, journalists and cartoonists conduct press conferences in the committees allotted to them. The press conference usually lasts for 15-20 minutes allowing each correspondent to ask 2-3 questions each, excluding the follow-up questions. Before the press conference, delegates are expected to devise questions based on thorough research and observation of committee proceedings. It is advised that one prepares as many questions as possible to avoid any overlap between the questions of fellow correspondents and gets them approved by the Executive Board beforehand. The questions can be directed towards an individual delegate, a specific bloc, or the committee at large. If the question is addressed to a specific bloc or the committee at large, it is under the discretion of the UNCA Executive Board to determine who shall answer the question.

Journalists need to ensure that they keep their agency bias in mind while conducting press conferences. They are also expected to write an article based on the proceedings of the press conference, the details for which are provided in the 'Textual Media' section of the background guide.

Follow-ups are highly encouraged especially when a delegate fails to provide a satisfactory response to the question posed by the correspondent. They are also reflective of the correspondent's research and understanding of the agenda of their allotted committee. However, pleas to follow up are granted only at the discretion of the Executive Board. Finally, the key to a successful press conference for a correspondent is confidence and composure alongside the quality of questions posed.

How to go about Research

At the very basis of journalism lies the inveterate duty of journalists to report news and provide people with thoroughly well-researched information which is factually correct, as well as plausible to the utmost good faith. These factors are not the only ones which an article should comprise. An article must not only be well-written but should also cover both sides of the story and uncover iniquity in the journalist's pursuit of verity. In order to carry out this objective in the most scrupulous way possible, one must be thoroughly well acquainted with the news agency to which they have been assigned.

Here are a few pointers to keep in mind while going about your research as a member of the press of the United Nations Correspondents Association:

News Agency

A news agency is the portfolio allotted to each journalist in the UNCA. It is, in essence, the better part of one's identity as a journalist. One must be thorough with the research of their allotted news agencies, which should include their history, establishment, current status, accolades, etc.

Agency Bias

Every journalist is allotted a news agency which becomes their portfolio for the rest of the conference. When discussing the political spectrum, we're looking at the range of political opinions, from left to right. For example, left-leaning agencies often support progressive ideas like government involvement in healthcare or climate action. A well-known example of a left-leaning agency is The Wire. On the other hand, right-leaning agencies tend to support more traditional views, like limited government and free-market policies. Fox News is a good example of a right-leaning agency. Journalists are obligated to adopt the bias of their news agency throughout reporting and committee sessions which depends on several factors such as ownership, political affiliations, and the country in which their news agency is based. Delegates are required to exhibit their understanding of their news agency's bias in committee through article submissions as well as the arguments put forth by them during crisis discussions. Admitting one's bias goes against the ethics of journalism hence no news agency can ever own up to being prejudiced- which provides news agencies a nuance most other portfolios lack.

As biases can evolve over time, it is imperative that journalists undertake extensive research to make sure their bias coincides with the committee's freeze date. Reading papers and visiting websites of the news agencies can help you to be exceedingly thorough with the agency's perspective.

Background Guides

Delegates must familiarise themselves thoroughly with the background guide of the UNCA and that of the committee assigned to them. Background guides serve as the foundation for the committee's agenda and as the terminus a quo for the research a journalist is required to undertake. It is recommended that all journalists visit websites to learn more about the agenda and to acquire information for speeches or articles. It is also highly suggested that every point which is presented is meticulously verified and fact-checked.

It is recommended that delegates study international relations and world politics in order to be ready for any crisis. They may also review the matrix of the committees in order to gain a better understanding of their procedures.

Crises

With the world subject to rising authoritarianism, a lack of democratic guarantees, waning faith in the media, and impending economic quandary, it becomes increasingly apparent that the proceedings of the United Nations Correspondents Association will inevitably reflect the mayhem of real-world journalism. When a storm rages outside the window, the shadows bloom by the hearth as well. In addition to assessing the journalists' understanding of the issues faced by the press in the real world, the aim of crises is to test one's ability to respond to novel and chaotic circumstances, allegations, or threats. Staying solid under pressure, refusing to crumble in the name of truth- Commitment to the agency bias while debating and formulating a resolution is paramount. Even the slightest deviance from the same could result in a journalist going against the interests of his/her agency. Naturally, going against the agency is going against the fundamental nature of one's identity as a journalist.

Journalists in real life are often placed in rapidly changing, volatile situations wherein they have to make do with the mercurial circumstances at hand. The forthcoming convolutions guarantee to test each delegate and encourage each and every participant to step beyond their comfort zone.

Written Crisis

For the written crisis, journalists will be required to write an article based on crisis updates given during the committee session while adhering to tight deadlines. The journalists are expected to be aware of the current socio-political and economic situation, how their agency relates to it, as well as their agency's stance regarding significant issues. For example, the committee could be split into groups of state-run vs privately owned agencies, with different crisis updates for each. To further exemplify, state-run agencies could have a crisis regarding the censorship laws in their country and privately owned agencies could have a crisis regarding sensationalism.

Verbal Crisis

Crisis is a high-stakes situation where journalists (or their simulated portfolios parallel to the real world) interact with simulated but real-world inspired situations involving the press.

It will require the journalists to debate on certain ethical hindrances to free and fair reportage; defend their stance and question the policies of their fellow journalists, and lobby in order to build rapport with like-minded agencies and form blocs based on the direction of the committee and nature of the crisis, as well as pass an exhaustive resolution to conclude the conference.

Keeping in line with the agency bias and foreign policy is of the utmost importance. It is also suggested that prior to the conference, journalists become familiar with their agency and country's role within the UNCA

Lobbying

Lobbying refers to the formation of blocs or coalitions, with their agencies having similar political and economic interests in a particular situation. Blocs that rise from successful lobbying will put forth collective DRs (refer to rules of procedure). The crisis/ situation at hand can lead to unusual alliances. For example, Fox News and the New York Times may agree on censorship issues but be at odds with each other on the 'Capitol Riots'.

Lobbying is usually done outside committee sessions or during unmoderated caucuses due to their informal nature. Successful lobbying is constitution. The rules of procedure will be further explicated, and while adherence is important, the content of one's arguments takes precedence. It is advised that journalists thoroughly inspect the section on problems faced by the press, as a beginning point for their research.

Verbal crisis is more prone to frequent updates leading to an evolution of dynamics and blocs. A journalist has certain powers, depending on the nature of their news agency- but also limitations. For example, a journalist cannot modify government affairs, nor can a journalist interfere with foreign policy. This jurisdiction extends beyond the scope of being aware of one's restraints and limitations, but also knowing how much information one, as a journalist belonging to an agency, can reveal.

not just the result of a silver tongue and an amiable facade, but also the ability to back up promises and have true substance to arguments and speeches. Lobbying also requires one to be cordial with possible allies- further incentive to maintain parliamentary etiquette.

Though the executive board will frown upon misconduct between rival blocs, rhetoric is permissible and to a limited extent, appreciated.

Communiques

According to Oxford Dictionary, a communique is an official announcement or statement, especially one made to the media. In the context of a Model UN committee, it is a written communication carefully utilised by a delegate to interact with entities outside the committee, such as government officials or other actors, to influence the crisis. Its significance lies in its ability to allow delegates to solicit help, make threats, and drive the narrative of the committee in a direction that favours their portfolio. It allows you to mould future committee proceedings and thereby make an indelible mark on the committee as a whole.

UNCA Journalism accepts two forms of communiques: covert and overt communiques.

COVERT COMMUNIQUE

A covert communique is a secret or private official communication. Unlike overt messages that are shown to the whole committee, a covert communique exists only for the Executive Board's perusal, often containing sensitive instructions for actions like espionage or other clandestine operations.

OVERT COMMUNIQUE

An overt communique is a public and direct communication. Unlike a covert communique, which is rooted in its illicit nature, an overt one is meant to be seen and drafted by the intended recipients.

Textual Media

It will be the duty of United Nations Correspondents Association members to represent their designated news organisations in an all-encompassing manner. Delegates will be expected to examine the current political unrest in committee and portray it in their written pieces, in addition to embodying their agency biases.

Furthermore, there is a clear correlation between the calibre of the articles and the time invested in research and analysis, as well as the efforts taken to preserve the originality of the work and writing style. As a result, UNCA journalists have access to a vast array of article types that will be allocated to them during the conference.

It is mandatory for journalists to submit their pieces as editable Google Docs. Note that after a document is submitted, it should not be modified.

Furthermore, comments given by the Executive Board cannot be resolved; rather, they are to be kept in mind for future use as reference.

Pre-Conference Submission

As the name suggests, pre-conference articles are required to be submitted before the initiation of the conference. All journalists are required to turn in a position paper as their pre-conference submission.

Please note the deadline for the pre-conference article, which is a position paper, is 18th April 2026, at 11:59 pm.

To reiterate, all articles must be mailed to uncajournalism2026.smun@gmail.com in an editable google document

(Kindly refer to the submission guidelines and the Annexure section of the background guide before submitting.)

Position Paper

Word limit- 500-600 words

A position paper should allude to a journalist's understanding of the news agency allotted to them, as well as their views on the agenda of their assigned committees. It should consist of information that describes the details of the news agency such as its history and establishment, affiliations, achievements and accolades, etc. One must also talk about their news agency's stance and bias in relation to the agenda of the committee they have been assigned to. Additionally, journalists must also mention their agency's stance on the ongoing crisis and agenda of the UNCA Journalism committee.

At the end of the position paper, journalists are required to cite their sources by putting up links to the websites they referred to while writing the piece.

This article type can be used by journalists as a means to showcase their understanding of their news agency, their research and detailed analysis, and the clarity of expression in their writing.

Beat

Word limit: 350-400 words

Beat reporting, also known as specialised reporting, is a genre of journalism that demands a writer to devote a significant amount of time to a single issue, subject, or topic. A reporter's beat is typically the subject they delve into. Through a beat, a journalist would essentially be giving an overview of committee proceedings. The beat could revolve around a particular subtopic of a committee's agenda, a significant discussion taking place in the committee, or an interesting circumstance that unfolds in the committee. It is more of a narration of events from which the reporter may draw conclusions that further their bias. All claims, however, must be backed with evidence such as quotes by delegates, occurrences in committee, research, etc. It involves an examination of one specific subtopic of a committee's agenda (say, the Syrian refugee crisis within an agenda discussing emigration to Europe). These pieces are expected to be succinct and replete with solutions. Beats at SMUN are distinctive in that they also necessitate a significant amount of commentary and analysis, which is not the case at most other conferences.

Opinion Editorial

Word limit- 500-600 words

An opinion editorial presents itself as the perfect opportunity for journalists to manifest their agency bias. Through this article, a journalist is tasked with convincing the readers to side with them by believing in their perspective of a given situation within the agenda by coming up with cogent and compelling arguments which support their stance. Ideally, an opinion editorial also attempts to break down the oppositional stance by discerning fallacies and pointing out the shortcomings in their argument. It requires a very definite structure; beginning with a thesis statement, an extensive argument, followed by a strong conclusion that could include feasible solutions. It is of utmost importance that one's agency bias shines through.

Analytical

Word limit: 400 - 500 words

An analytical piece allows a journalist to deconstruct the agenda at hand, analysing and scrutinising the numerous aspects of the agenda at hand. It takes into account all events and details linked to the agenda, from a brief background of the topic at hand, points discussed during committee proceedings, opposing stances, and the evidence backing them. Further, it deliberates upon possible outcomes and solutions to the agenda. This piece differs from an opinion editorial as, instead of proving a specific factor of the agenda, it delves more into all features of the circumstances, dissecting them in great depth. The structuring of this article is of vital importance, and its quality is directly linked to the research conducted by the journalist.

Counter Analytical

Word limit: 400 - 500 words

The only way this essay varies from an analytical piece is that it breaks down the agenda from a whole new angle. Journalists are essentially expected to deconstruct the agenda while maintaining a viewpoint that is entirely at odds with the news agency that they work for. For example, a journalist from Al

Jazeera, which is a left-centrist-leaning agency, would be expected to write from a right-wing, socially conservative perspective. An analytical and a counter-analytical have a similar format. The journalist's awareness of their bias is evident in this essay, which also gives them room to express their creativity and incorporate extensive research.

Press Conference Critique

Word limit: 350-400 words

The press conference is followed by the press conference critique, wherein each journalist is meant to provide a crisp review of the proceedings of the press conference, keeping in mind one's agency bias. Analysis of the answers provided by those questioned and the question posed must be conducted by the journalists in this piece. They must critique the responses received, focusing on why they weren't satisfactory. The agency's bias plays a pivotal role in formulating questions and evaluating the answers provided. The introduction of this piece could serve as an opportunity to provide a basic overview of the agenda as well as committee dynamics at present. It summarises and analyses not just a moment, but perhaps all the sessions of the conference so far. It represents the evolution of delegates, events, and developments that take place.

Using Twitter (now known as X) as a platform to provide information to the masses has become an important part of one's journalistic duties. It has gained the respect of journalists, news organisations, media outlets, parliamentarians, and even government officials as a useful reporting tool. Although it ought to go without saying that information cannot be fully conveyed in 280 characters, Twitter serves as the ideal medium for breaking news, fostering opinion, and promoting analysis with over 206 million users worldwide.

Tweets are a way to establish oneself as a journalist (Think Rajdeep Sardesai. Though a divisive man with even more divisive opinions, he has established himself as an active and up-to-date journalist with strong views.) and one's views openly, flourishingly, but without being obnoxious and weaving such details into the pieces one writes.

Current developments that have taken place within Twitter, or 'X', which Musk hopes will lead to decreased censorship, are not excuses to use hateful speech. Rhetoric, however, is always a brilliant way to establish one's bias on the virtual platform.

Feature

Word limit- 350-400 words

Among all articles, the feature article is the one that provides journalists with complete creative freedom. The journalists are supposed to choose a theme based on the committee's agenda and weave their articles around it. Delegates have the opportunity to cover various themes in depth. They can choose any medium as per their liking and comfort to express their views, be it through poems, diary entries from different points of view, sarcastic, well-written pieces, etc. Though feature articles provide ample artistic freedom to the writer, it is imperative to stick to one's agency bias. Feature pieces are ideal for displaying creative flair and writing prowess- using extravagance that would be out of place when discussing, say, a humanitarian crisis about Syrian refugees. Feature pieces are bright spots of colour, of creativity, and without the restraints of formatting, binding them, but still tinted the sombre hue of one's bias.

Case Study

Word limit: 450-500 words

Delegates will be required to pick a certain instance related to the agenda of the community they are reporting on. This could be a humanitarian situation, a lack of resources in a particular region, a proposal made by a delegate, etc. The topic shall be picked at the discretion of the journalist. One should include extensive research, relevant pictures, and statistics if necessary. Your article should include a few lines on the relevance of your topic. For example, when reporting on a SPECPOL committee, delegates propose the institution of the Belt-Road initiative in the Western Sahara region. A journalist can then write a case study on the concept of BRIs and why countries like the United States are against it. This reason has to be mentioned in the article. A case study also has to be in accordance with one's bias.

Tweets

Text Limit: 280 characters (50-60 words)

The tweets must reflect the bias of a journalist's news agency. To summarise, using satire, sarcasm, puns, and other witticisms to enhance this concise submission is strongly recommended. While keeping this in mind, it is strictly prohibited to make a mockery of other delegates or Executive Board members. The tweet must be brief (no more than two lines), powerful, and ideally employed as a tool for humorous relief.

A minimum of three tweets each day is required from all delegates, while there is no restriction on how many can be written in a single day.

Journalists are required to compile all their tweets of the day in one Google Doc before sharing it with the Executive Board email ID. The heading must be written in the following manner: "Tweets from XYZ News Agency". No byline is required for this submission.

Miscellaneous

No word limit

They are meant to showcase the creative abilities of a delegate outside of the confines of the UNCA format. These pieces are not mandatory and therefore, would be published only through the online blog. There is a variety of possible miscellaneous pieces:-

1. Satire

An informal type of article which looks at matters from a witty and comical perspective. Casual language is permissible, but any insulting language or inappropriate language will result in strict punishment. A useful website to study satires would be The Onion.

2. Found Poem

A piece that combines excerpts from various sources, acknowledging its origins, to form a distinctive poetic expression. Such a piece need not be relevant to the committee assigned or in accordance with a news agency's bias. Here is an example of a Found Poem. Journalists also have the option of submitting a voice or video recording and reading out these comments, as shown in this video.

3. Collaborative pieces

For miscellaneous pieces, journalists may collaborate with cartoonists and photographers to come up with unique, creative pieces.

The Glories of a Pen

XYZ of China Daily outlines the institution's agenda

"Words can be deleted, but the facts won't be deleted with them."

-Ai Weiwei

At a time when poverty was omnipresent in the People's Republic of China, disinformation reigned its press and democracy was exemplified beyond logic, the China Daily was established to alleviate the plague of propaganda. In June 1981, China's first English daily was founded and quickly grew by over 250% in just a year. By July of 1982, it was already planning publications in the United States, the United Kingdom and Australia.

Being the first Western-style newspaper in China, the Daily faced its fair share of challenges. From being accused of being the government's 'puppet' to being defamed for allegedly publishing fake opinion editorials; China Daily has been the centre of numerous press conspiracy theories. The accession of Xi Jinping, however, has attenuated the publication house of these troubles.

Although the power shift brought with it harsh laws, the idea of China being an ideal democracy was shattered, and China was instead proclaimed as a socialist democracy with the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) as the central representative of the people. The new administration also brought in its wake new reforms to the media in China. Within a year of these changes, the China Daily won the 'International Newspaper of the Year at the Newspaper Awards', most likely due to the detailed and relatively balanced stories it provided to its readers. In addition, China Daily, under the supportive wing of the state, came to be identified as a newspaper for those trying to learn English in China, or those seeking entertainment integrated with news, worldwide.

Sadly, from the moment it created for itself an online presence in 1996, the Daily has been subject to numerous false accusations. Owing to this defamation, numerous attempts of the team at curtailing the spread of misinformation have been in vain. The most prominent example would be the video report published by The New York Times on August 19, 2020. The report was shot in Kuitun, a Xinjian Uighur autonomous region, and used secret cameras to show the apparent plight of the people working in the area. But ironically, cameras are in fact allowed in the facility, and permission to shoot for a report is easy to come by. The report also used only cut-scenes, preventing the viewer from inferring the full context. Several residents and workers came forward claiming that their videos were taken out of context to portray a positive situation in a negative light. When the Daily brought this to the world's notice by making a video report of its own, most viewers refused to believe it. Owing to the several falsifications that have eroded the trust of its readers and viewers, the world has turned a blind eye to honest attempts at outlining the facts.

The year 2021 marks 50 years from when the founding father Jiang Muyue had the vision to form a newspaper company that would serve fairly and diligently. Even today, his vision holds true as China Daily attempts to provide high-quality content to the country against all odds. Media plays a consequential role in any nation, bearing in mind its responsibility of educating and entertaining the masses. The China Daily believes it has lived up to its responsibility and will continue to do so in the future.

No Hope for A Better Harvest

XYZ of the Dawn News Agency analyses defects in the prospective resolution of the NDA Bloc

The proceedings of the Joint Committee of Parliament were aimed mainly towards finalising resolutions and presenting before the committee a Draft Resolution for further discussion. The committee is divided into three primary blocs- the NDA Bloc, the UPA Bloc and the Bloc of the Third Front.

The beginning of Session 5 of the committee was marked by the proposal of Anupriya Patel of Apna Dal, for an unmoderated caucus of twenty minutes. Being favourable by more than half of the committee, this motion was passed and an unmoderated caucus for twenty minutes was in order, so as to discuss potential Draft Resolutions.

The farmer agitation, being the materialisation of the flawed laws proposed by the BJP-led NDA Alliance, has apparently failed to provoke a befitting flow of thought within the NDA Bloc. The tenets of the prospective Draft Resolution being discussed by the Bloc, during the course of its unmoderated caucus, are cause for worry, as they add fuel to the fire.

First and most importantly, despite assuring farmers of the continuation of the MSP scheme, the BJP has made no mention whatsoever of this revolutionary regime in its draft. The BJP, in all its grandiosity, is overlooking the fact that without the MSP system in place, it would be impossible to feed millions of Indians, belonging to the lower strata of society through the Targeted Public Distribution System(TPDS).

The NDA Bloc also intends to implement these laws in select states for a trial period of one harvest season after all parties meet to discuss which states will take part. This proposal was indeed uncalled for, as India is a country with wide-ranging weather conditions, soil texture, cropping patterns, irrigation systems and most importantly farmers with different cultural and economic backgrounds. A scheme that could work for a farmer in Punjab may not necessarily be propitious for one in Odisha. It is the need of the hour that the BJP takes cognisance of this fact.

Further, the bloc also aims at ensuring the setting up of an independent organisation that will oversee trade outside APMC mandis. It has, however, given no further information on the composition of this bloc, at what levels it is going to function, and what rules will it stand by to supervise trade outside the mandis as such, and without such concrete information, the farmer continues to feel uncertain of trade outside the APMCs.

The most outlandish of all proposals, however, is that the NDA Alliance plans to give Panchayats of villages the power to be consulting authorities, in case the farmers and sponsors have issues regarding the contracts. It is not uncommon that the members of a Panchayat are farmers themselves, and even if they aren't, they do not have the suitable legal knowledge to understand the intricacies of contracts drafted by the legal teams of large companies. In light of such a clause, a farmer cannot be ensured of his security from deceit by these large corporations.

The BJP-led NDA Alliance has thus again proved its insensitivity towards, and inability to comprehend the Indian farmer's demands, who they allegedly refer to as Khalistanis and Maoists. The BJP is once again thwarting the voice of dissent with a view to further its own cause, and in order to avoid further civic strife, it needs to wake up to the voices of the deprived farmer community.

War and Peace: The Seesaw

XYZ of The Telegraph sheds light upon the prevalent debate within the Crisis Committee

We have made all our finest endeavours to perpetuate peace and harmony. Either in the form of laws and promises or through influencing and convincing people, we have strived and assayed to corroborate solitude. Somewhere in history, there came an epoch when a certain group of people came up with the iniquitous thought of dominating the others. Ages and ages later, here we stand today at the threshold of a new era, where the news of disputes and clashes has become a perpetual thing; where the future lies before us.

On the 26th of June, 1956 the Suez Canal, a canal of extreme strategic importance, jointly owned by the British, French and Egyptians, was nationalised under the presidency of Gamal Abdel Nasser. Hence, Egypt sought to secure dominance over the canal by the virtue of its geographical proximity and fervent leadership. This unanticipated decision to nationalise the canal was neither ethical nor necessary. Given that the British were the primary shareholders of the canal, and further, had the right to occupy the canal in times of global calamities, Egypt had no legal or moral rights to take away what was rightfully theirs.

One could argue that Egypt has, for long, suffered under the capitalist forces of the West, but it is crucial to note that Egypt's unilateral decision to nationalise the canal and transfer the Suez Canal Company's assets to the state defies the Convention of Constantinople of 1888 and the Anglo-Egyptian treaty of 1954. While the former guaranteed passage to all ships in times of war and peace, the latter permitted the British to return to the canal base in times of international crisis. Hence, it is tangible that Egypt had no legal claims over the Suez Canal. Moreover, beyond legal dimensions, it is illegitimate for the Egyptian government to take this drastic step without advance notice and consultation.

Thus, united, the French, British and Israelis decided to form an alliance to deliberate and think of an ideally suited course of action. The major question of whether or not to mount an attack over Egypt was a bone of contention. However, after a while, a compromise was worked out wherein the British agreed to the possibility of military action and the French and Israelis accepted the proposal of diplomatic measures.

Although, before any action could be taken the presence and the working of this secret committee was released internationally. Furthermore, to aggravate the situation, the three countries now faced opposition from all across the world and had no allies left. It was hence, impractical to take up arms with no backing. The severity of the circumstances was inexplicable.

An ideal solution to this convoluted situation would be to influence Egypt to make negotiations with the involved countries under the inspection of the United States and arrive at an agreement that would benefit all parties concerned.

Mankind has faced such arduous situations in history as well and has overcome them. Naturally, the future too would throw several such hardships our way. What defines the conclusion of such times is the degree of acuity and perseverance these challenges are dealt with. The seesaw of war and peace must be stabilised vigilantly for it is only the equilibrium of this seesaw that maintains harmony in our lives.

Election 2024: Unveils a New Dawn

XYZ of The Indian Express elucidates the All India Political Parties Meet 2024

Since the very beginning of the human race, there has been a persistent skirmish over who is superior and more capable to acquire power and supremacy. For ages, this quarrel was treated with brutality and viciousness until the 18th century when the postulation of elections was introduced. Since then several nations across the world have been following this conception.

Democracy is the only form of government that provides the provision of maintaining transparency between the one in power and the citizens of the nation. The legacy of elections helps to perpetuate the ideology of a democratic state which suggests that power obliquely lies in the hands of the citizens.

The All India Political Parties Meet 2024 is a futuristic committee which deals with the functioning of the Indian democracy and provides you with a chance of representing a lynchpin member of divergent political parties, having diverse perceptions and perceiving how the apparatus of the government works. The committee would be taking place on April 4th, 2024. The All India Political Parties Meet is a harbinger of unrestricted political debate, discussion and deliberation free from the legislative functions of the parliament.

It is a consensus-building body where representatives of multifarious political parties with contradictory ideologies build upon a common denominator of understanding of agendas in order to ensure minimal time wastage. It is for this reason that the agendas kept in the committee are divisive. The All India Political Parties Meet proselytises tranquil dissensions to eventually maintain the decorum.

The agenda of The All India Political Parties Meet comprehensively being the overall evolution of the nation throws light on issues such as national security, women's safety, unemployment and illiteracy. Theoretically defined as 'multifaceted and all-encompassing', national security is often stretched to include a mind-boggling diversity of issues. This is in a compendious way the reason why repeated endeavours at formulating a national security doctrine have failed in recent years. A focus on national security is presupposed to be propitious for the ruling party BJP as it could brush aside the Opposition's endeavours to leverage failures of the government on generating employment and relieving farm distress.

One issue which needs to be dealt with is to steer clear of conflicts and maintain healthy relationships with foreign countries. India should avoid meddling in their internal matters as intervening in their internal affairs could prove to be detrimental for us. For instance,

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's open support for President Donald Trump in the event 'Howdy Modi' for the imminent election could generate negative views towards India from the international community and predominantly from the Democrats in the United States. This could turn out to be a threat to India's national image.

The All India Political Parties Meet gives you a chance to express your opinions as a representative to a wider set of people and fill the void in your journey towards success and triumph.

"Yesterday's failures are today's seeds that must be diligently planted to be able to abundantly harvest tomorrow's success"

Unravelling the Suez Canal Crisis

XYZ of The Telegraph scrutinises the agenda of the Joint Crisis Committee

Since the very beginning of the human race, there has been a persistent skirmish over who is superior and more capable to acquire power and supremacy. When the ideologies of dominance and ascendancy struck the human mind, the world looked succulent with scepticism and a revolution was discerned. Human beings are social animals who experience several divergent emotions about discrete situations, have contrasting views, and are likely to indulge into a controversy. It is an instinct characteristic of humans to become collusive and autocratic when greed of acquiring power pinches them.

The Suez Canal was constructed in 1869, to allow efficient navigation. The canal provided the shortest maritime link between Europe and Asia and hence, its construction was seen as the dawn of a new era. The primary shareholders incorporated the Egyptians, French and British. However, later in 1875, the Egyptians were forced to sell 44% of their shares to the British, thus making the British supreme. On the 26th of July, Egypt nationalised the Suez Canal Company, which was a joint British-French enterprise under the presidency of Gamal Abdel Nasser, a luminary worshipped by the majority of the Egyptians. The natives of the country celebrated this achievement enthusiastically, freed from the iniquitous forces of the West. Even though

Egypt carried out this process in an undemocratic manner, it would have been wrong for the other nations to take control of what is rightfully theirs. However, Israel, the United Kingdom and France, who had been profoundly affected by this unanticipated action chose to revolt.

Aggravating the situation, the cold war between the two superpowers that were the United States and the USSR also seems to have had an impact on the contemporary crisis. Both the US and the USSR had established good relationships with Egypt. However, over a period of time, the USSR and Egypt's alliance grew stronger, and the USSR backed the decision of Egypt to nationalise the canal. The United States and the Soviets were competing to emerge as a global superpower and hence, tended to influence France and Great Britain as well.

Adding fuel to the fire of instability in the Middle East, the Arab world had a strong influence on the Suez Canal Crisis too. Inside the Arab World, yet another cold war had brewed. Countries such as Iraq, Iran, Turkey, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and more had been collaborating to form an agreement with an aim to elevate prosperity and harmony in the Middle East. However, they weren't all united throughout. The Arab World had split up into two major segments. On one hand, was the Pro-United States bloc which was being led by Iran and on the other hand, was the Pro-USSR bloc which was currently under the direction of Nasser.

It is evident that the Suez Canal Crisis had created havoc all across the globe. With the USSR and the United States consistently trying to influence the Middle East, the Arab World performing its own bit, the United Nations intervening to examine the situation and Israel, France and United Kingdoms being directly involved, the Suez Canal Crisis not only brought about the decline of Great Britain's imperial history but also allowed Egypt and the Arab world to emerge victoriously.

If we let these cold indifferences among us take control of our mind, we'll become apathetic and insensitive. We must remember that we are all a part of the same family and the world is ours to take care of. The ideas of liberalism, fraternity and equality must prevail. If we do not stand united and fight the dark forces that hover over humanity we succumb to the murk. We succumb to devilry and we lose our propensity to empathise.

Sample of Press Conference Critique

Far Away From Terra Firma

XYZ of the Dawn News Agency analyses the Press Conference conducted during the course of committee proceedings.

The BJP-led NDA alliance has yet again brought to the fore its insensitivity and cold apathy towards the plight of farmers that feed India, made evident by their answers during the press conference conducted by Gouri Mehra of the Dawn News Agency, during the proceedings in the Joint Parliamentary Committee.

The journalist addressed her first question to the Honourable Agricultural Minister of India, Mr Narendra Tomar concerning The Farmers' Empowerment and Protection Agreement on Price Assurance and Farm Services Act, 2020, that allows corporates to directly trade with farmers by signing contracts. The question entailed two aspects of this pernicious law—first, considering that the farming sector of India employs more than 50% of its population, isn't it rather frightening to note that farmers who sign contracts with companies using the pre-fixing method are risking the freedom of not being able to avail market-rate benefits.

The Minister's reply to this wasn't very reassuring, as he very skillfully dodged the essence of the question stating what the Congress hasn't been able to do, instead of focussing on the current inadequacies of his own laws pose. The second part of the question required the Minister to provide his views on the fact that farmers in India who have no legal knowledge whatsoever, through this act face the possibility of being exploited by large teams of legal corporations. Moreover, the system of 'Model Contracts' that the government has said it 'may' introduce is not very encouraging either, since the government itself is rather unclear about it. The Minister once again pursued his tactic of circumventing the specific query, rather than shedding light on the system of model contracts. On being asked about it specifically, the minister hesitated and seemed perplexed, reverting to his previous answer concerning the dispute settlement mechanism.

The journalist's next question was addressed towards all members of the NDA Alliance and tackled the ramifications of the Amendment to the Essential Commodities Act of 1955. Honourable Finance Minister, Ms Nirmala Sitharaman volunteered to answer the question that addressed the amendment to the Essential Commodities Act of 1955, which now allows the hoarding of commodities that were once declared inevitable. Why is the Government so oblivious to the fact that this would inevitably lead to artificial demand in the market and the manipulation of rates by large corporations placing the Indian farmer at a massive disadvantage?" The Finance Minister's answer was rather unnerving and representative of the BJPs internally diverse views on the subject. The Minister, very boldly, stated that the Amendment does not allow any hoarding of goods and questioned the journalist about the same, leaving the committee in utter disbelief. It became highly unambiguous that the BJP needs to look into the fact that its own Ministers are not conversant with the draconian policies it proposes, before launching awareness campaigns for farmers.

Mr Narendra Tomar attempted to come to the rescue by stating that the amount an organisation can hoard will remain limited by the installed capacity and demand of products that an organisation has. However, on being counter-questioned as to how the government plans to monitor this capacity and demand, the Minister said it 'wasn't what he exactly meant'.

This Press Conference reveals the internal incongruity of views in the BJP and also shows how only a certain faction within the party can answer questions related to the subject at hand. It is the need of the hour that the party with its allies, streamlines its views on the subject and comes up with tangible solutions to avoid civic strife in the nation regarding the same.

Sample of Case Study

The Rapaciousness of Weed

XYZ of Shen Bao News Agency presents a case study on the impact of opium on trade.

China with its very enormous population, huge land area, long history of East Asian dominance, and heritage in art and literature is also gaining growing importance in international trade and finance. Its goods such as porcelain, tea, and silk reap a rich benefit by way of export to satiate the demand of the Victorian British. Britain's inability to trade in goods that are comparable in richness to Chinese goods continues to be woefully inadequate.

The British desire to expand its imperial power and sell more goods to balance the Chinese trade surplus should in no way be a reason to enforce the opium trade on China. The use of military force to smuggle harmful weed into this country is even more specious. The growing use of opium both by the opulent and the masses is a cause for great worry for the Emperor and rightly so.

Dao Guyang who is now the Emperor had himself at one point in his youth opined "my mind suddenly becomes clear, my eyes and Cognizance refreshed....When you ask for happiness, it gives you happiness." when he consumed Opium.

The Chinese traders and officials in charge of coastal security are reaping rich benefits from the kickbacks received from smugglers and British agents. It remains a moot point whether opium should be prohibited completely or its trade should be regulated. The most important concern is the damage that opium is wreaking on the health and capacity to work of the subjects of this dynasty. The economic damage is collateral, as the demand for silver that is being paid to foreign merchants for opium has increased by leaps and bounds. The domestic price of silver has now crossed the ceiling, leading to a worrisome reduction in tax payments. The case for social unrest and resentment in people is understandable and can not be allowed to exacerbate.

Opium trade or smuggling is by no means confined to the coastal region only. Statistics on opium shipments to China from India tell their own tale. About 40,000 chests averaging 63.5kg each per year were brought into China by 1838, a phenomenal increase compared to 200 chests per year in 1729 and 1000 chests per year in 1767. Thus, the balance of payments has now started to swing in favor of the British and has had an impact on the imperial military whose spending has increased to guard the coastal cities.

The Chinese government confiscated and destroyed about 1400 tons of opium warehoused at Canton by British merchants. This led to hostilities with British warships being sent to destroy the Chinese blockade and proceed toward Canton. The Qing forces need to be strengthened to counter the British offensive.

The recognized medicinal advantages of Opium become questionable once it gains the status of addiction when used via pipe smoking. Many people have begun to prepare their pipes and sniff them even when they can barely afford a meal.

The Chinese government is in the right to not allow free trade with the British as it is morally imperative to save the people of China. Expansion of trade should by no means lead to British jurisdiction over its territories. China should thus continue its campaign to resist the free trade of Opium and also punish corrupt Chinese officials who are hand in glove with the British traders.

My Wife and Three of Our Children

XYZ of Fox News pens the plight of Kadima Kabenge, a mine worker who fled attacks in Kasai Province

I worked day and night,
Waiting for the sufferings to subside
Slaving in the mine shaft,
To provide
For my wife and our three children

Descending
Several metres underground
Uncertain to see daylight again
Or return to
My wife and our three children

(That cobalt is tainted
With the blood of this man
Who slaved in the mineshaft
To protect
His wife and their three children)

Once, I cut my finger
Another time I crushed my foot
But I slaved in that mineshaft
To tend
For my wife and our three children

Misfortune struck again
More armed men arrived
They threatened to kill
So for the first time, I slaved
For the armed men, that night

In the morning they were gone
And returned the same night
They beat me, and I endured it
To save
My wife and our three children

(But every man has his breaking point
And Kadima had reached his
He started giving up hope
He was simply unable to cope)

There were girls too in those shafts
As old as my little Chéckine
It pains me to recall
The atrocities committed'
And so I forbade wandering about
Of my wife and our three children

(Kadima was offered a job
In a nearby village
He set off in February
And returned in March
Having earned enough to buy that mine shaft)

For a week we lived satisfied
I was happy
To have returned to, protected, provided and tended
For my wife and our three children
Then life took a turn, the doomsday

The 15th of March
Armed men killed my wife and three of our children
I don't know why.

(Kadima Kabenge was able to survive those attacks and was soon aided by the UNHCR task force. But such was the mental trauma that he subsequently committed suicide)

PRIVATE/COVERT COMMUNIQUE

TOP SECRET: INTERNAL CIRCULATION ONLY

From: Ma'an News Agency

To: The Media Relations Wing, Fatah (Faction of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation)

SUBJECT: Breach of Journalistic Neutrality: Urgent Disclosure re: Israeli and U.S. Strategic Coordination Against Refugee Infrastructure

NOTE:

The following communique is being submitted by Ma'an News Agency as a journalistic moral obligation to alert the Executive Board that a crisis is on: one involving someone willfully committing a war crime, someone kidnapping a fellow journalist, and nearly destroying press accountability across two continents. Amir Hussain, who is a senior correspondent at Ma'an News Agency, owned classified audio evidence about an intercepted phone call between President Joe Biden and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. The call centred on the premeditated targeting of Jabalia Refugee Camp. The tape was never entirely officially published by Hussain; however, he mentioned the duplicitous and cunning aims of the American-Israeli alliance in an article, revealing their true intentions about a horrendous attack at Jabalia, elaborated upon in detail below.

Our involvement began with a ping from the European Union's Tech Monitoring Cell. A flagged inconsistency in satellite communications was traced to a compromised frequency used by Israeli military networks. The file that arrived in our mailbox was not sent by a source but triggered by an automated heuristic set up post the 2023 blackout. This led our tech investigations desk to a transcription tucked within encrypted metadata.

According to our internal source, the tip included an audio clip of an intercepted call that implicated not only political leaders but the very machinery of press suppression. He was ordered to start research on Jabalia refugee camp and submit editorials that further shatter the narrative that portrays Israel as the victim and the violence it perpetrates as necessary. The details of the audio call intercepted by the EU's Tech Monitoring Cell are delineated below:

Phase 1: The Calamitous Conversation

Date of Call Interception:

Source of intercept: Leaked signal patch routed through compromised Unit 8200 terminal in Sdot HaGalil, Israel

Call Details:

- Satellite relay – GLOBEKEY-7
- Security layer compromised via internal 8200 asset
- Audio patch transferred via encrypted flash relay to a single Yedioth contact

Transcription:

President Biden: “I want all the land of Palestine to be covered in the blood of all its men. End their lineage. Bomb it, bury it, black it out.”

PM Netanyahu: “We’ll call it anti-tunnel. Say secondary explosions? I’ll take care of the narrative, not sure about this UN though.”

President Biden: “I don’t care what the UN says. Doesn’t matter. The UN will pass some watered-down resolution, and Susan is ready to veto anything toothy. Just flatten Jabalia. I want no identifiable rooftops left by morning. Let every block burn if it must.”

Netanyahu: [chuckling] “We’re on the same page. Civilians will be... regrettable collateral. Tell our artillery teams to pre-tag UNRWA schools as 'accidental spillovers.’”

Biden: “Use the new bunker-busters. The GBU-57s. Tell Raytheon it’s a trial run. Just make sure it’s swift. And keep your media boys in line. Tell [REDACTED] to keep printing the Hamas weapons fairy tale.”

Netanyahu: “Say it's Hamas’ weapons cliché, like always?”

Biden: “Exactly. And keep Haaretz running the ‘children used as shields’ narrative. Hell, throw in a quote from Dershowitz if you want legitimacy.”

Netanyahu: “This’ll go down easier than hummus at AIPAC.”

Muffled voices erupt, and the call disconnects

audio attached at the end

October 28, 2023, (Morning): The Jabalia Refugee Camp in northern Gaza suffered from a brutal attack launched from two F-15s, killing 208 adults and 29 children.

Medical services delineated the use of bunker-buster ordinance, most likely GBU-28s, which annihilated innumerable blocks. No roof remained visible, no family safe. The world watched apathetically, and digitally, but Amir Hussain knew what had preceded it and published it.

On the evening of October 28, Ma’an’s front page read:

October 27, 2023: Two men introduced themselves as "regional press liaisons" claiming to belong to the European Union’s fact-checking consortium, arrived unannounced at Amir's dejected apartment in Gaza City. Surveillance analysis further confirmed they used burner credentials and ended up exiting the property exactly within 11 minutes.

Upon rejecting the silence they aimed to impose on him, Amir entered a dangerous terrain. With discreet digital routes, the American-Israeli Public Affairs media cooperation trust sent him threats on October 27.

Translation of Hebrew in English: Dear Mr Hussain, the American-Israel Public Affairs media cooperation recognises your hard work and wishes to compensate you for the same, through rewards and golden opportunities. You are thus invited *to pay for courage. Be prepared.

God Bless America and Israel!
(The threats were recovered by Ma'an News Agency, after Amir's wife shared them with the Editor-in-Chief after his disappearance.)*

Phase 2: The Abduction

On the morning of October 28, Amir Hussain reported to the Gazan headquarters of the Fatah Wing, summoned to conduct a press conference with Mahmoud Abbas.

Ma'an truly laments to report that he never managed to return home.

Date: October 28, 2023

Location: Outside the Office of Media Relations,
Fatah Political Bureau
Al-Quds Tower, 3rd Floor,
16 Karamah Street, Gaza City, Palestine

Furthermore, CCTV footage (14:46) reveals that a Hyundai Staria van, matte and jet black, with no license plates and a blackened windshield, began encircling the complex.

Witnesses: Saw four men dressed in tactical gear. Physical descriptions include:

- One tall male (~6'3"), bald, Caucasian, tattoo of a blue star visible on the left forearm.
- One shorter male (~5'6"), blonde hair, limping on left leg.
- Two medium-built males wearing ballistic vests with Hebrew and English patches that read "PRIVATE RESPONSE UNIT"

Eyewitness testimony from janitor Abdul Rehman indicates Amir was abducted at the back exit. A chloroform-soaked rag was reportedly found by him at the back door, insinuating that Amir was carried unconscious into the van.

Several attempts were made by Ma'an News Agency, Human Rights Watch, and Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) to contact him; however, they were unsuccessful.

Additional Note:

This operation bears resemblance to previously documented instances in East Beirut and Jenin in 2014 and 2018, allegedly executed under Operation "Triage Echo."

Amir has been unreachable for two days now. His bereaved wife posted the following message through Ma'an News Agency's Twitter platform.

“ Amir was a patriot.. But he was tired of writing eulogies for children buried under rubble they called ‘strategic targets.’ My husband’s only crime was releasing a headline. The terrorists always silence what they fear. I know what he heard. I know what he chose to save. He believed in his country. He fought for his people. Now he’s most likely died trying to claw the Palestinians’ way back at the global table. I am ashamed. Ashamed of our silence. Ashamed of every journalist who stays quiet after this tragedy. The loss of Amir’s life is not collateral. It is something much greater. If left unattended, Israel will ensure there is one Amir in every family. But I am here to remind Israel, for every Amir they kill, we will birth one more. They can slaughter us, but they cannot escape the consequences of this occupation. So be patient. Indeed, the promise of Allah is truth. (Qur’an 30:60).

May the sun never set on Palestine. ”

Phase 3: Developments

Ma'an's tech investigations desk (a recent wing created after the October 2023 blackout) receives a secure tip from a whistleblower at a cloud-based security firm that handles surveillance for Israeli embassies worldwide. The whistleblower says the footage was flagged internally but marked for deletion. However, before it could be wiped, they mirrored it and reached out to a journalist they trusted to do more than sell headlines, a Ma'an investigative reporter named Lina Dawoud:

“They didn’t just vanish him. They walked him out in cuffs, blindfolded. We watched it on internal Slack before they purged it. This can’t die with us.”

The information stated below has been attained from Amnesty International and is for the awareness of Fatah and the WMC only.

STATUS: Sources in Amnesty International reveal that Amir is missing globally, but is currently held at Guantanamo Bay.

Hussain’s actions presented a clear and escalating threat to U.S. and Israeli battlefield cohesion, narrative control, and ongoing information warfare efforts in the region. The Israeli delegation, while unable to legally detain Amir under domestic grounds due to anticipated blowback, consented to coordinated third-party extrajudicial handling under the Expanded Security Accord (ESA) of 2021.

Ma'an requests that Fatah initiate stringent actions and fight for Amir's right to witness, publish, and live. We urge the proposal of a special investigative committee under the World Media Council that aims to examine such barbaric media attacks and restore media safety. Moreover, if Amir is not released, Ma'an will be compelled to release redacted segments of the call transcript to Al Jazeera.

NOTE TO EB:

The Delegate of Ma'an News Agency respectfully submits this proposal for immediate review and authorisation. All information shared is up to the discretion of the Executive Board to distribute further; however, we request that the identity of Ma'an news in providing this information remain classified, to avoid further attacks on the news agency as it navigates rescuing its fellow journalist from the trenches of the savage Guantanamo Bay.
